

Unique Children's Museum Exhibits Fabricator Lets Kids' Imaginations Soar

The most unfettered imaginations on the planet belong to our children. Their creativity is practically unlimited, making it a wonderful way to teach and entertain them. Children's museums therefore have a multitude of ways to connect with their audience especially through specialized children's museum exhibits that appeal to their senses.

Children learn through all of the senses, through light bright exhibit colors, tactile stimulation like water table exhibits and museum exhibits that allow them to play make believe and act out different scenarios.

There are an endless amount of things to teach children, including nature and science, gross and fine motor skills, reading literacy, media and music, history, archeology, story telling and creativity, balance and physical coordination, sports, government, community helpers, other cultures, space exploration, types of jobs and much more. Truly outstanding children's museum exhibits are made by museum fabricators with the ability to imagine like a child, manufacture with the highest quality and safety standards and deliver on time.

AD Creative is an innovative children's museum exhibit fabricator serving children's museums worldwide. We love helping children of all age groups get excited about learning and doing at discovery children museums of all types.

What makes a great children's museum exhibit?

Interactivity

A great children's museum exhibit provides kids with an opportunity for hands-on, largely unsupervised exploratory play. Although of course, kids should be accompanied by an adult when visiting a museum, whether a parent, teacher or other chaperone, the actual exhibits should be safe and accessible enough so that children can use them without much adult help or supervision. It is through this kind of spontaneous exploration that learning (and fun) happens.

For example, one thing that children really love is water table exhibits. They get the tactile feel of the water and get to know how water flows and gathers. For nature exhibits, they may reach their little hands into the water table to touch marine animals, experiencing that watery environment for themselves.

In order to allow this unfettered exploration, our water table exhibits are designed for easy access to children of all sizes but with safety in mind so adults can let the children roam and experience the exhibits largely on their own. The sides are finished off in a way that prevents scrapes and are the right height so kids can reach in and play, but not fall in. As experts in kids museum fabrication, we make sure that your water exhibit is designed for easy maintenance by museum staff so it always remains clean and safe.

Especially for younger children, the best types of children's museum exhibits provide hands-on, interactive learning. While some exhibits might include a touchscreen with additional information, we are big believers in things that kids can touch, hold, use and do.

Children have a constant stream of digital content to them available on mobile phones, tablets and computers, so hands-on activities give them a technology break and actually stimulate different parts of their brains. Research has shown that when people do things, they remember them better than when they just read about or are told information.

Aesthetics that appeal to children

Another thing that makes fun and memorable experiences is when museum fabricators make the exhibits visually interesting. Children are attracted by bright colors, so our light bright exhibits instantly pique their interest and curiosity. Even when we are recreating a physical environment for a science and nature museum and need to use natural looking stone or other materials, we make sure that the other elements, including the lighting are bright and inviting.

Multi-sensory

Children learn through all of the senses, so in addition to the visual aspect, we also make sure that there are plenty of things in our children's museum exhibits to touch, hear and even smell. Different children learn better through a particular sense, for example tactile manipulation, acting out a scene or hearing information or music.

Stealth learning

When your children's museum offers a variety of sensory interactive activities, you can be sure that little visitors are learning in multiple ways and having a great time. And things that look like just play to a child, like playing music, have benefits like laying a foundation for mathematics; fine motor skill activities help train young brains for better handwriting, which improves language skills. Museum fabricators like us who really know children are able to design exhibits that teach vital skills without seeming academic or boring in any way.

Collaboration

The technology that is ubiquitous today means that kids are often alone, looking at their phones. Children's museum exhibits offer them a chance to play with and discuss things with other kids. In the unstructured environment of the children's museum, kids are able to have a common topic that they can use as way to interact and build social skills. For example, some discovery children museum exhibits encourage kids to work together to solve problems or put on a skit and this encourages discussion, negotiation and planning each of which are invaluable skills for children to learn.

Developmentally appropriate

We are not just exhibit fabricators who take orders; each of our exhibits is carefully thought out and designed to work with children at different levels of development and to transmit information to them in a way that they can understand. There are distinct ages at which children learn differently. In general as kids get older, they are better able to think conceptually and abstractly.

From ages 2-7, children are very focused on absorbing sensory input in a general way. From 7 to 11, they develop the ability to think logically but can only apply this to real things and people that they can see. After age 11, kids can think about concepts without having to relate them to concrete examples. So when we develop a children's museum exhibit that teaches an abstract concept like culture, for example, we make sure to relate this to real people that younger kids can see and things they can handle rather than describing the more abstract concepts like you can do for an older audience.

Something for the adults

While the main focus of children's museum exhibits is the children, it is common for around half of children's museum visitors to be adults accompanying children. In order to encourage parents and other adults to bring children to the children's museum, smart exhibit fabricators incorporate adult engagement and entertainment into the exhibits as well.

While children are exploring exhibits with physical interactivity, we make sure to include information that will inform and perhaps surprise adults. And let's not forget that adults like to have fun too! We include things they can participate in, so they're not just standing around bored while the kids have a blast.

In addition to knowing how children think and how to design great children's museum exhibits, there are some other things you should know about us.

Quality

We have a dedication to fabricating exhibits of the highest quality and durability. That means that when you choose us as your exhibit fabricators, you know that you will be able to use that exhibit for years to come with minimal issues other than wear and tear from the thousands of happy children who will be using it. We also strive to create exhibits that make it easy for your staff to keep clean and in good shape with durable materials and construction.

Interactive

Just like we create children's museum exhibits that are interactive, we always work with you in a partnership. This ensures good communication and makes sure that we are creating exhibits that are appropriate for your specific audience's age and background and that our exhibits meet and exceed your requirements and goals. If you have a question or issue during the development process, about delivery or manufacturing or even once the exhibit has been installed, we encourage you to let us know.

It is our goal to offer excellent communication and customer service at every stage of your project so we can be your go-to museum fabricator for the foreseeable future. Have a question, suggestion or concern at any point during the process? Let us know as soon as possible so we can put your mind at ease. We will also keep you completely up to date on our progress, including any questions we may have of you.

Creative

At heart, we are imaginative artists and we like to let our imaginations run wild so your exhibits will be completely unique and engaging. When creating things for children, a truly creative exhibit fabricator is able to make an exhibit that is just as fun the second, third and fourth time a child experiences it as it was the very first time.

This extra level of creativity leads to more repeat visits and more recommendations that lead to new visitors. It also will get your museum noticed by various types of media like local TV stations, tourism websites, parenting websites, magazines and newspapers. These forms of publicity can be priceless in promoting your children's museum and attracting new and repeat visitors.

Practical and reliable

While we have a child-like imagination, our operations are strictly adult and professional. We make sure that as your chosen museum fabricator, that all practical limitations have been considered and accounted for including space limitations, plumbing and drainage for water table exhibits and electric for lighting and interactive digital features.

We understand that you need your exhibits to open on schedule and will adapt to your time table, making sure that our museum exhibits are delivered and installed on time. You can be sure that your delivery and installation will be done with the utmost professionalism because we want to be your exhibit fabricator for many years to come.

Flexible

As a relatively new museum fabricator in the market, we do not take you for granted. We really appreciate your business and always accommodate your requests and needs to the greatest extent possible.

Another advantage that we have in being new is that we are not set in our ways. We can look at things from a different point of view, making us more innovative and easier to work with than some of our competitors. Museums constantly have to evolve so that you appeal to new generations of children with different worldviews and experiences and your exhibit fabricator should be right there with you.

Affordable

With our off the charts creativity, our understanding of how children learn at different stages of development, our quality manufacturing and quality control process and everything else we offer, you might think we charge premium prices. But actually, when it comes to getting a museum fabricator with all of these qualities, the prices we charge are surprisingly affordable.

It is our goal to have our exhibits touch as many children as possible and we also understand that budgets are often constrained by economic factors, the availability of government and private grants and tourism. We intentionally keep our prices low to make sure that our top-of-the-line children's museum exhibits are accessible to as many forward thinking children's museums as possible.
